

Middle School students participating in a discussion about reducing trash in the watershed.

Middle School students examining collected trash from the street.

A close-up photograph of trash collected on the streets for the students to identify and analyze.

Middle School students simulating rain on a stormwater diorama while studying sources of watershed pollution.

Middle School students learning from Elisa Wilfong, City's Water Pollution Control Administrator, how to assess trash generation on streets near to their school and community.